

Mierzwinski, Mark ORCID:

<https://orcid.org/0000-0002-9751-5865> (2015) 'Banter, bonding and bodies': Power imbalances within male Physical Education (PE). In: Research Reflections Conference, 10th September 2016, York St John University. (Unpublished)

Downloaded from: <http://ray.yorks.ac.uk/id/eprint/2683/>

Research at York St John (RaY) is an institutional repository. It supports the principles of open access by making the research outputs of the University available in digital form. Copyright of the items stored in RaY reside with the authors and/or other copyright owners. Users may access full text items free of charge, and may download a copy for private study or non-commercial research. For further reuse terms, see licence terms governing individual outputs. Institutional Repository Policy Statement

RaY

Research at the University of York St John

For more information please contact RaY at ray@yorks.ac.uk

'Banter, bonding and bodies': Power imbalances within male Physical Education (PE)

Power is present in human relationships, and is rarely equal. The extent of these power imbalances depends on situation, context and behaviour. Amongst young males shifts in balances of power can lead to behaviours such as bullying, particularly at school. The diverse school environment means that power imbalances are constantly in flux. This is something Rivers (2012) recognised in his call for researchers to consider how bullying exists in different educational contexts. With this in mind, an ethnographic study that focused on power imbalances within male PE was undertaken.

Often inherent within PE are single-sex classes, changes of clothing, a central focus on the performance of the visual body and a strong emphasis on competition – aspects that are often missing from most other subjects. These, together with more common practices such as peer-group dynamics, informed my examination of key social processes and subsequent relationships in male PE. Whilst only preliminary, results highlight influential bonding rituals between young males, the significance of young males' relationships with their PE teachers and a culture of shame and fear in reporting instances of 'bullying'.